

Elise H. Lawson, MD, MSHS, is Assistant Professor of Surgery at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. She received her undergraduate degree from Harvey Mudd College and her medical degree from Stanford University. She completed general surgery residency at UCLA and colorectal surgery fellowship at the Lahey Hospital and Medical Center. Her research focuses on decreasing variation in the delivery of colorectal cancer care and addressing disparities in access and outcomes.

Joe Melvin, MD, is a Fellow in Colorectal Surgery at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. He received his undergraduate degree from Boston College and his MD from Rush Medical College. He then completed his general surgery training at the University of Missouri-Columbia. Dr. Melvin's future plans include joining the colorectal surgery group at St. Mark's Hospital of Salt Lake City focusing on training and educating colorectal fellows.

Cristina B. Geltzeler, MD, is Assistant Professor at the University of Wisconsin and William S. Middleton Memorial Veterans Hospital. She obtained her undergraduate degree from the University of Georgia and her MD from the Medical University of South Carolina. She completed general surgery training at Oregon Health and Science University and a colorectal fellowship at Washington University in St. Louis. She conducts health services research focused on improving care for patients with colorectal diseases.

Charles Heise, MD, is Professor in the Department of Surgery, Section of Colorectal Surgery at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. He completed both his undergraduate and medical school degrees at the University of Minnesota. He completed his general surgery residency at the University of Wisconsin and colorectal fellowship at the University of Minnesota. He is currently the colorectal surgery fellowship program director and director of surgical operations at the University of Wisconsin.

Eugene F. Foley, MD, is Professor of Surgery and Chief of the Division of Colon and Rectal Surgery at the University of Wisconsin. He completed his general surgery residency at the New England Deaconess Hospital in Boston, and his colon and rectal surgery fellowship at the Lahey Clinic. He currently serves as the Vice Chair of Education for the University of Wisconsin Department of Surgery and Co-Medical Director of the University of Wisconsin Digestive Health Center.

Ray King, MD, PhD, is Assistant Professor in the Department of Surgery, Section of Colorectal Surgery at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. He received his undergraduate degree at Rutgers University. He completed his graduate training at Boston University followed by post-doctoral fellowship at Harvard Medical School. He received his medical degree from Ross University and completed general surgery residency at the Medical College of Georgia. He then completed a colorectal fellowship at the University of Minnesota.

Bruce A. Harms, MD, MBA, is Professor of Surgery at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. Dr. Harms received his undergraduate and medical school education at the University of Nebraska and Nebraska Medical Center. He completed general surgery residency training at the University of Wisconsin followed by a registrar position in surgery at Gloucester Royal Hospital-England. His clinical research focuses on ileal pouch reconstructive surgery for ulcerative colitis.

Evie Carchman, MD, is Assistant Professor in the Department of Surgery, Section of Colorectal Surgery at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. She completed her undergraduate training at Virginia Polytechnic Institute followed by medical school and general surgery residency at the Virginia Commonwealth Institute and University of Pittsburgh, respectively. She then completed a colorectal fellowship at the Cleveland Clinic Foundation. Dr. Carchman heads a translational basic science program that focuses on anal cancer prevention and treatment.